AT THE TABLE IN THE USA

The United States is a rich and varied blend of peoples, religions, and cultures, and this diversity is reflected in its cuisine. Succeeding waves of immigrants, including those arriving on the United States' shores today, have brought new culinary traditions and adapted them to the ingredients, kitchens, and customs they found in their new homeland — ever expanding what is called "American food." Despite the rise in popularity of many other ethnic cuisines, it is Chinese and Italian restaurants that dominate this field. Chinese cooks who arrived to cook for their countrymen working on the railroad in the West didn't have much to work with, but they threw together little bits of meat and vegetables in their large pans. As this type of cooking spread across the country, a whole new cuisine emerged: Chinese-American, replete with Egg Rolls, Wonton Soup. Fried Rice, Chicken Chow Mein, and Spare Ribs. A bit later came the big one: Italian-American food. The real triumph of the cuisine is in the U.S. home where pizza, lasagna, manicotti, meatballs, veal parmigiana, play a tremendously vital role in the everyday fare of U.S. citizens

When the Harris Public Opinion Poll asked Americans to choose foods which they think of as typically American, hamburgers and cheeseburgers (29%), apple pie (20%) and hot dogs (13%) topped the list. The only other two foods mentioned by significant numbers were barbecue (9%) and fried chicken (7%).

A Monthly Publication of the US Mission.

When asked by Food & Wine magazine and America Online what the quintessential American food was, most Americans picked a burger & fries (67%) over fried chicken (16%), hotdogs (14%) and ice-cream sundaes (4%).

A type of food that was not mentioned by the U.S. citizens surveyed, is the SPAM[®], canned pork shoulder, ham and spices, that has been a true American icon for 60 years.

By the way, "SPAM" is also the term used for a single email that is mass-mailed to a large number of recipients. It is also called unsolicited commercial email (UCE).

The use of the name SPAM for these messages was inspired by a Monty Python play in which a group of people sung, "SPAM, SPAM, SPAM, ..." in the background, eventually drowning out all other conversation. Spam is certainly doing the same thing with our e-mails.

■ Two December Tables

The American Christmas table looks much like a Thanksgiving feast of turkey or ham, potatoes and pie.

No Christmas is complete without lots of desserts, and nothing symbolizes Christmas more than baked breads and cookies hot from the oven. Many American traditional desserts, like other Christmas customs, were started long ago in other parts of the world.

At Christmas Eve gatherings adults drink eggnog, a drink made of cream, milk, sugar, beaten eggs and brandy or rum. Plenty of eggnog or hot cocoa is on hand in colder climates for carolers, or people who go from house to house to sing Christmas carols to their neighbors.

American Mouths, Arab Tastes

On a recent evening at Public, a sultry restaurant in downtown New York City, the high-fashion crowd was three-deep at the bar, all waiting for their tables. But they weren't waiting for sushi, tamales, or brick-oven pizza. They were there for, well, the falafel. Yes, falafel. At this chic hot spot, packed with trendy masses, the coriander falafel with grilled kangaroo and lemon tahini sauce is one of the best-selling dishes on the menu.

The number of restaurants featuring the varied cuisines of the Arab World, from Morocco through the Levant, is currently on the rise in America. And it's not just the number of Arab restaurants that is growing, but also the festive Middle Eastern style of eating mezze, appetizer-sized portions of different foods, and small plates - and the broad array of Middle Eastern ingredients like grape leaves, saffron, hummus, and couscous.

New York City. There, you'll find streets crowded with food carts and quick-serve spots, all serving kabobs, shwarma and falafel.

The city is also host to a number of more upscale Arabic dining establishments like Kemia Bar. The lounge is packed to capacity nightly, and features belly dancing, DJs and live drumming along with a lengthy menu of dishes like chicken tagine with lemon, olive oil and couscous.

In a book published by the U.S. Department of State - Writers on America (http://usinfo.state.gov/products/ pubs/writers), Elmaz Abinader, an Arab-American author, poet and performance artist, recalls her childhood in these words:

Elmaz Abinader is an Arab-American writer and performance artist.

Children of the Roojme: A Family's Journey from Lebanon, her first book, is a widely acclaimed memoir of one family's immigration.

She currently teaches at Mills College, Oakland, California.

Drawing me from the entrance, down the hall, to the dining room, was one of my favorite smells. It was Wednesday, the day of the week when my mother covered the table for eight with newspaper, dragged two large blue cans from the pantry, and lined up the cookie sheets. By the time I arrived home from school in the afternoon, the house smelled of Arabic bread and loaves and loaves of the round puffy disks leaned against each other in rows on the table. She made triangles of spinach pies, cinnamon rolls, and fruit pies filled with pears from the trees growing on our land. Before greeting me, she looked up, her face flour-smudged, and said, "There are 68 loaves. You can have one."

By now, my sisters have joined me at one end of the table where we pass the apple butter to each other to slather on the warm bread. When Arabic bread comes out of the oven, it is filled with air and looks like a little pillow; as it cools, the bread flattens to what Americans recognize as "pita" bread. Other bread was rarely eaten in our house; even when we put hot dogs on the grill, they were dropped into a half of "cohbs," then covered with ketchup.

The smell was hypnotic and mitigated the melancholy I carried home with my lessons to do that night.(...)

Our social interactions on the other side of the door had little weight inside the house. We had a different community who gathered on weekends and during the summer. Relatives from towns around Pennsylvania and Ohio filled our living room and dining room, circling the table crowded with my mother's fabulous array of Arabic dishes: hummus, chick bean dip, baba ghanouj, eggplant with sesame, stuffed grape leaves, shish kebob, kibbee, raw or fried lamb and bulgur wheat patties, a leg of lamb, a turkey stuffed with rice and raisins and platter after platter of side dishes. The famous Arabic bread sat skyscraper high on plates at either end.
